college and it is rather surprising that the club did not send its best twelve out there; but the policy of dividing the squad and giving every man a chance to play is a wise one and the beneficial results are likely to be seen later in the season, when the first twelve is picked and the players buckle down to work for the Canadian matches and Pan-American games. The players do not worry at all at being beaten by colleges like Johns Hopkins and Swarthmore; indeed, it is much better for them than selecting the strongest twelve and winning by big margins. Nevertheless, they are quite convinced that the American colleges are advancing rapidly in knowledge of the game, and I will add that the former owe much to what they have learned from the Crescent veterans.
